

REMARKS/ARGUMENTS

Claims 12-22 are pending.

Claims 12-22 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. § 102(b) as being anticipated by Lowery et al.

An aspect of the present invention is creating an integrated web page including combining common data fields from among plural web pages into the integrated web page. In particular, the pending claims recite a “copy function” for doing this. See for example claims 15 and 22 as previously presented, and claims 12-14 as currently amended. A copy function is assigned to each web page that will be integrated.

Lowery teaches accessing common data among sources other than web pages and combining such common data into an integrated web page. The rebuttal to Applicants’ arguments presented in an Office action mailed January 9, 2006 do not indicate where and how Lowery teaches integrating common data from among plural web pages into an integrated web page. OA oage 6, paragraph 6. Lowery was cited at col. 5, lines 40-47 which clearly states “page server 404 (1) can retrieve data from more than one data source and incorporate the data from these multiple data sources in a single Web page,” where “data sources ... include databases, spreadsheets, files and any other type of data repository.” Lowery therefore does not teach creating an integrated web page having common data from among other web pages.

Lowery teaches that a page server 404 (1) can retrieve data from more than one data source and incorporate the data from these multiple data sources in a single Web page. Id. Lowery does not teach the recited “copy function” being to each web page that is the target for integration into an integrated web page. Lowery’s page server performs the integration task, whereas the pending claims recite a “copy function” assigned to each web page to be integrated to perform the task. Lowery does not teach the recited “copy function.”
